I'm Really Not That Interesting.

So often these classes ask you to create something about yourself.

What I've found is that I'm really not that interesting. I work full time, I go to school full time and both of those event leave very little time for fun. I hardly watch television or movies. I rarely get the opportunity to hang out with the rest of the world, because I'm usually spending far too much time reading school books or trying to stay on top of the Real Estate industry as that's part of my job.

I find it a little disenchanting about the educational system that people want to know so much about me, in the context of a newsletter in this class, or in a speech for other classes. I'm not in college to learn how little I do in the world, I'm here to better myself in an educational sense.

So I continue to create documents that I'll never use in the real world and continuously try to sound interesting, without pets, as a single guy with no family close, who spends most of his time too busy to stop and smell the roses.

I Used To Enjoy Hiking.

I used to go hiking all the time. One of my favorite places to go hiking around the Portland area is in the Columbia Gorge. It's a place called Beacon Rock, found on the Washington side of the Columbia Gorge, just across from Multnomah Falls. It's an easy hike and the views are beautiful on a clear day.
